For example, to install "LZ4-Linux-1.8.1", just go to their download page and use this link: Open a terminal and extract the archive to /opt directory, or wherever you like. /opt/LZ4-Linux-1.8.1/bin/lz4: error while loading shared libraries: libbz2.so.1: cannot open shared object file: No such file or directory E: Unable to locate package librsvg-2.0.1 After you installed LZ4, you can check to make sure it is working properly, just try lz4 --version During install, you will be prompted to install sudo and nss-softoken. You can choose to install these, or skip it. Before we get to the how, here are a few tips for those of you who want to install: 1. Before we install, you need to make sure you have the LZ4 source code as downloaded from GitHub. More details on how to get it. 2. During the development, you may install via ./configure, make, and make install (but not on the production server). 3. If you are going to use LZ4 with MySQL, don't forget to read the MySQL LZ4 page. Once you have LZ4 installed on your server, you can launch a server with this command: /opt/LZ4-Linux-1.8.1/bin/lz4 --server --min-block-size 64 --stdout --lz4c You will see a long output like this: ./main

Simply install the MoSync GoogleTalk plugin, and you're ready to rock! Posted by samzenpuson Tuesday October 17, 2008 @01:30PM from the a-digital-pen-in-the-hand dept. Cwiley writes "Now that Apple's latest OS X Leopard is in production release, the build available for download is the final one. This means that Apple is freezing the production build of OS X in order to fix all the bugs and address hardware compatibility issues. Only experienced and expert users should be trying to use this version — even those who do get it will likely want to wait until the second or third official release. Leopard has been available to select developers since July. Users, however, were still able to download it from Apple's developer site." An anonymous reader writes "Apple today released OS X 10.5.1, the first in a series of Mac updates that will incorporate numerous bug fixes and some additional improvements. In a blog post, Apple said that OS X 10.5 was 'an amazing experience with countless under the hood improvements' and that 10.5.1 'was a good opportunity to address some of the outstanding bugs that users have reported.' In addition to bug fixes, the update also adds the ability to use regular expressions in Spotlight searches, an improved Mail.app, and the ability to delete events and data in the Calendar."
