Tips and tricks At starliker.com, we are constantly improving the service. We are interested in being noticed, not in making. Your comments are very welcome.Â . Hint: The look up time varies from 10000 milliseconds to 2 seconds (default is about 2 seconds), depending on the size of your cache, what processor you're using, and the number of indexes you have. Please keep in mind that if you have too many indexes, the look up time will increase. A little hint: When a lookup is successful, the script will return the information you're searching for quickly. In the case of multiple answers, it will return the first result it found, and only add the other results after you stop scrolling. Samples This is a screenshot of the results page: The same results page, different order: As you can see, as the cache of the page is different, the list is presented in a different order. An example for such page: The page is the results page of a search of Starliker for the word "movie": A: The benefit of storing the content of the page in a cache is that you can load the cached version of the page directly in your browser, without having to ask your server for it. This is very useful for big sites that are loaded from cache a lot, and having a few minutes delay when you access the site can be quite annoying (e.g. when you've typed in a search query on a slow internet connection). The main time to perform a lookup is when your cache expires: When the cache expires, the script will start to look for a new cache for that page. So, basically you want to keep the amount of pages that you cache as low as possible, to reduce the amount of time needed to "resolve" the lookup time. If you don't want to cache your entire site, you can write a customized policy for each page that you don't want cached. There are 3 policies out of the box: USER: This policy (or User:) allows you to cache each page of your site when it is accessed by your own user (so pages that are browsed by you). In that case, your cache will expire whenever the page of your site changes. PAGE: This policy (or Page:) allows you to cache one page in your site (e
