however, IE 6 still works I've ran into a problem that I didn't notice before: (new to the company, so don't know my limitations) I created a jQuery plugin that works perfectly in all browsers except for Safari, for some reason. I don't understand why as Safari 5.1.7 should be upgraded to a recent version (which works everywhere else)

The plugin has a validate method. For some reason, it doesn't work on Safari and IE.

I've made a fiddle here: The reason why i don't suggest a newer version is that I use jQuery 1.3.2. But since it's for client stuff, it's gotta work. Does anyone know how to fix this?

Edit: I just want it to work in Safari. A: You can try to use.click() instead of.hover() to improve performance of browser.

$(document).ready(function() { $('.Hover').hover(function() {
    $(this).addClass('HoverActive'); }, function() { $(this).removeClass('HoverActive'); }); $('#bug').click(function() { alert("I

(Sarah Huckabee Sanders) is the Senior Communications Adviser to the President of the United States, which means she is basically in charge of trying to convince the American public that most of what they see on Fox News is real and true. Even if you're a fan of the network, her job is pretty goddamn hard. Until now. The Washington Post says that Sanders' press briefings will become much more entertaining from now on, and in a great example of what was once considered a great journalistic institution going all Sarah Palin and giving itself a really empowering new nickname, says that they will have a full-on debate among the interns. "I am not part of [the] Trump Administration' and 'I am not responsible for lying for the President,' the senior communications adviser told Post colleague Ashley Parker in an interview," reports The Daily Beast's Joe Heim. "The competition will decide who outwits whom." According to The Washington Post, though, that's all just one part of how Sanders will prepare for her next press conference, which will include this little gem of irony: "Don Jr. will sit there quietly and be like, 'That was funny.'" The Hill reports that as a result of that awesome strategy, the briefings will become "far more entertaining for both Sanders and the press corps." We can all agree that's a fair trade. Q: Why do the Jews worship God without a beard? Many of the Jews don't shave their beards because the Jews say that God doesn't have a beard. But, did God ever say anything about his beard or hair? What is the reason behind this? A: There is a rule which states that a man may not have a beard if he is a priest, since the priest is a representative of God on earth. There are those who consider that the coming of Mashiach is delayed so that this rule will be abolished in the Mess

November 13, 2011 Rolling Stones' Don Henley: "If You've Got The Money Honey, I've Got The Time." The massive heist in 2008 that once again played out in the pages of Rolling Stone began in the name of maintaining good character. Rolling Stone revealed back in September that Don Henley, Phil Everly and a few other members of The Eagles "set aside some money" in 2004 "to alleviate any potential tax troubles that could arise from subsequent albums". Rolling Stone also reveals that members "raised the money to pay off a couple of their debts. But one of their friends, Aaron Barker, gambled away the money on a Ponzi scheme". The group is rumored to be in the millions of dollars in debt. Rolling Stone.composted that the group went to a "minor stroke specialist" when they "noticed changes in his left arm and leg". The group "believed that it was due to an undiagnosed heart ailment and to check his health". The group "hired a private detective, Paul Jones", to follow the doctor and believed "that he might have been acting inappropriately in front of an incapacitated man". Rolling Stone.comciting a source said that the Stones "learned that Jones had been making advances toward a relative of the man in the hospital. The man left against his will and the doctor -- and possibly the Stones' lawyer -- were subsequently fired. Eventually, the group's
