Q: How to make a jQuery ajax call to PlayFramework app I am trying to call a Play! 2.0 application with the following jQuery code. However, I am getting a 404 (The requested URL could not be matched by routing). From what I've read, Play! automatically routes requests to the index.jsp view. The call is taking place on the Google Chrome console. `$.ajax({ type: "POST", url: "", data: { name : "Bob"}, dataType: "json", success: function(data) { alert(data.name); } });` The question is, what URL should I be calling to get data from the Play! application? How do I get the view to return the data I need? A: You can achieve the same using the new HTTP API. This would work with the new Play 1.3.x system: `$http.post('/whatever', { name : "Bob" }) .success(function(data) { alert(data.name); }) .error(function(err) { // Error handling });` And from Play 2.1.x: `curl -X POST " .success(function(data) { alert(data.name); }) .error(function(err) { // Error handling });` The 0.7 version of the HTTP API takes a lot 0cc13bf012

Download Intel AMT Crack & product key. the best way to manage resources in order to provide better performance and stability for your Windows operating system. For more information, please visit the Intel AMT website. AMT is available as a free download from the Intel®.If it's true that "everybody hates the media," why are so many of us looking for them? I know that I have a sweet tooth, a weakness for other people's money, and an obtrusive interest in what everyone else is doing. Do I hate the media? No. Does my love for the media preclude my love for a chocolate pie? No. I'm in the middle of meeting a gaggle of reporters at San Diego's Balboa Park. They are all here because San Diego is home to the massive International Bird Rescue Research Center and all the friendly birds are currently there until they fly home for the summer. The center is full of volunteers as well as professionals — bird veterinarians, veterinary technologists, employees of both governmental and private organizations. It's easy to underestimate these people. They spend long days in a building that feels like a cross between a tropical jungle and an old steam engine. They lug around heavy cargo all day, often with heavy stomachs and faces that are constantly running. Most of them have signed up to help because they care about birds, but many of them are also motivated by the prospect of seeing their photographs in the paper or in a magazine. The SDSU journalism professor who is organizing this visit says that when she takes her class out to the conference center, more students and teachers sign up for hands-on fieldwork than on any other class. Most of them are making progress stories for a class in process and methods. But there are some folks there who want to just talk to some people, to hear what we do, and learn how we do it. It is a little like being in a zoo, and it's unavoidable. The problem is the zoo is inside of a business. Lots of people are part-time employees, and the offices and maintenance areas are filling up with computers and furniture. Every sign is covered with "No Photography" warnings, and every employee is carrying a cup of coffee, a muffin or some other food item. Even with all that, there are birds everywhere.

Sipping coffee and checking email, I step into a room where a technician is
