What's new:

If you are new to Final Fantasy or the Final Fantasy franchise, don't worry. In addition to the original story, you will also encounter maps and a variety of items that will help you advance your journey. We've even paid special attention to making the games user-friendly.

★ Rich Story

Finally, we are pleased to let you know our plan to tell a story more rich and diverse than ever before. Sure, the focus is on dialogue and characters, but don't think that this is the only field in which we have plans to increase the depth of the story.

As such, we are also actively investigating the idea of related scenes to be included in the dialogue.

For example, in Final Fantasy XV, when Noctis and Gladiolus are talking about the royal wedding, the scene in which Aldrynte informs the visitors about the fact that the wedding has been postponed is included in the dialogue. However, that scene wasn't meant as a part of the main story line, but as a subplot that shows that the circumstances are not easy for the people involved.

With Final Fantasy XV, we were able to closely integrate the various scenes that we added into the dialogue part of the story. Though Final Fantasy XV was unusual in that way, the various possibilities that the Final Fantasy series offers are limitless. By setting our sights on the idea of a story rich in diverse elements, we've placed the spotlight on the special feeling that Final Fantasy games have.

After all, the more varied and rich the story, the more glorious the adventure will be.

The story of Final Fantasy XV isn't complete yet. Please wait for a more exciting story in the future.

“Get ready for the Kingsglaive Adventure!”

It’s been too long since we’ve seen the Glendinions, the continent of the dead. No more do we let our guard down. We feel that the raging continent’s very existence is being challenged, as more information they're getting from the difference between the two. Because you think of the emerald as being very nice and you're thinking of a nice Christmas, and you're thinking of the Christmas card as being a little less special. But there's a difference, and when the target diver has a backup plan for their exchange, and then it works correctly, you can have a very optimistic target scene. "We tried to make it as realistic as we possibly could. When the target diver first picks up the target-diver beacon, the target-diver gets very excited. That's a good excitement. We actually put that in the program. And the target-diver should first pick it up, hold it up, look at it, look at the other people waiting in the dive plane, look at it again, the target-diver should be thinking, 'Why didn't I leave this at the house, at my house?' But the target diver did go home, put it in their house. The first person to actually pick it up will be a little more excited than the second person to pick it up, and they have their backup plan. They'll either go to the aircraft or they'll run to the dive boat. So there is that excitement. And we try to reflect that in the program. "A quick note on the issue of animals on submarines. The scuba divers that we use are what we call Australian defence force qualified. And the Australian defence force's operational requirements says that scuba divers should not go underwater with animals, basically, because the animals might climb on the submarine. So they train their divers not to do that, and if it's your own animals, fine, but what we don't want is animals that could drag someone up. "So we have to be careful how we use the animals, how long we use them, because we don't want them to get sick, or they might have a bad reaction to the scuba gear and have a problem with that, so we're very careful. We have a lot of expertise with animals, and we're not using them in here for play because it might disturb the animals if they see a fish or something. "We do, in the right situation, use dolphins as well. And the reason is they have very good hearing, but they
